With its 100th birthday approaching, members of Fertile Lutheran Church decided to give their building a face lift

FERTILE — There may have been a few paint jobs along the way, but Fertile Lutheran Church survived for 97 years without a face lift.

This week, the first major remodeling of the 85-foot structure was completed, giving the 1895 steeple a new look.

"For us, this was a major accomplishment," Arden Midtgaard, church president.

Midtgaard, whose grandfather Amund Midtgaard helped build the original structure, said members had talked of renovating the wooden steeple for years. The project was delayed until two years ago, when a Steeple Fund was established, Midtgaard said.

Special offerings were taken and the 225-member congregation sponsored fund-raising events that included a spring auction, Midtgaard said.

Cost of the project was close to $17,000, said Norman Froiland, chairman of the restoration committee. Riehle Brothers Decorating of Cresco completed the construction.

It wasn't that the steeple was "all that bad to look at," Midtgaard said.

But the shingles had begun to rot and would no longer hold paint, Froiland said. The congregation decided to renovate the steeple before serious problems developed, he said.

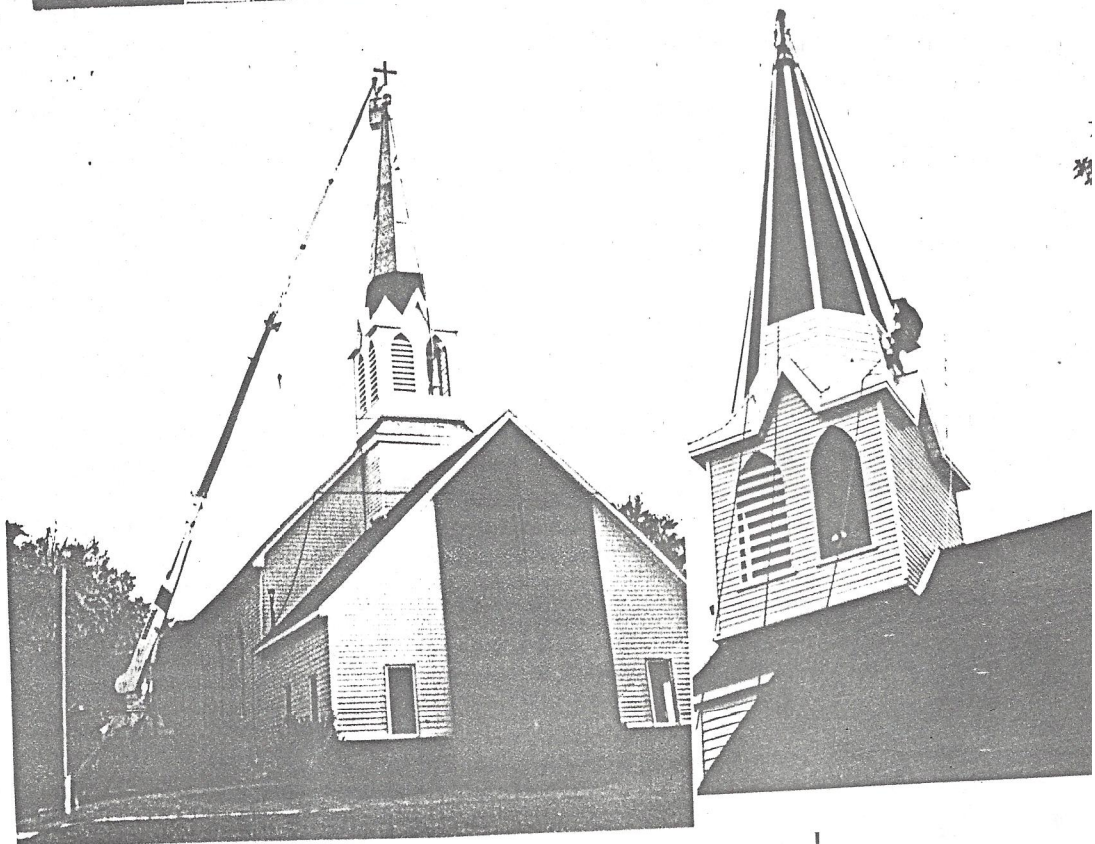

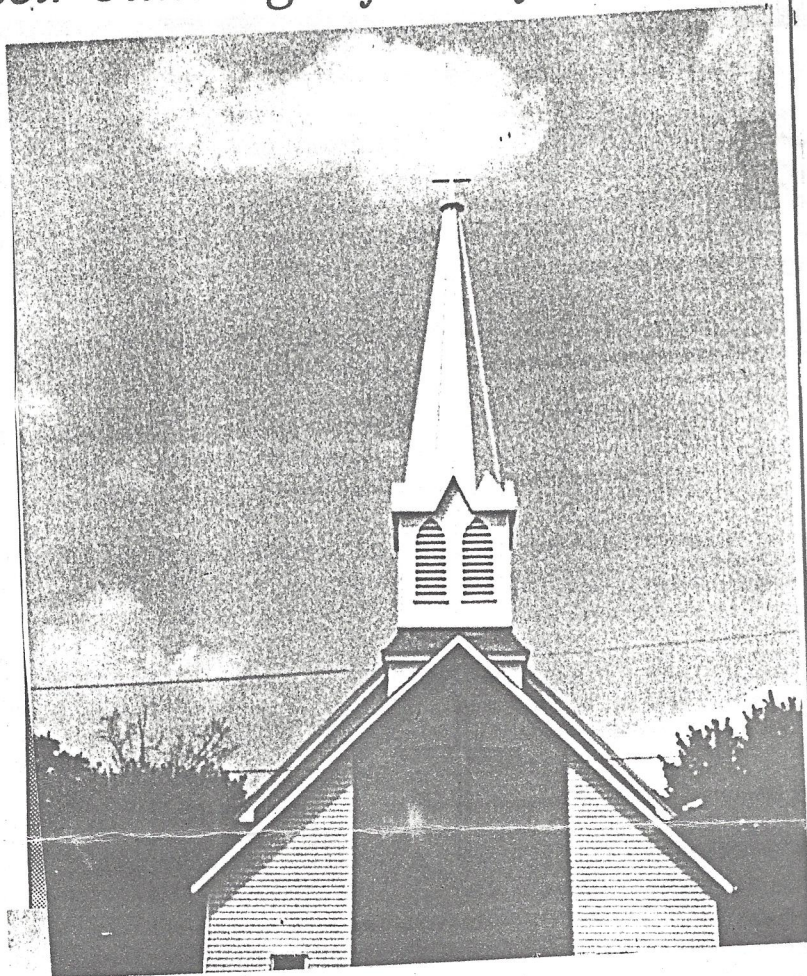

Church officials decided it was also a good time to enclose the previously-open bell tower to prevent weathering of the bell. The bell was given to the church in 1915 by the Young People's Society, Froiland said.

Work on the structure began in mid-July. The steeple's wooden shingles were replaced with steel siding. Rotting wood was replaced throughout.

The bell tower was covered and steel-sided louvres added.

At the steeple's crown, a 5-foot stainless steel cross was installed.

"It's a tribute to the faith of the forefathers who built it to try to keep it preserved," the Rev. Roger Kampstra said of the near-century old structure. "It was a major project for a church our size."

ntly on Mr. Ebaugh at his home, I found giant in size, square shouldered and still

As he shook my hand in greeting, I winced under his grip.
In the course of an hour's talk, he smoked his pipe incessantly, and when he spoke of his early years in the state, his eyes glowed with happy reminiscence,

Came in Iowa in 1870, Mr Ebaugh came to Iowa in the law days of 1870 when wolves ran in packs and when the banks of the Winnebago river were dotted with Indian tepees, during his first two years residence in Grant township, he lived within 80 rods of a tented village containing 750 Winnebago Indians.

"The village" said Mr Ebaugh, "Was situated at a point where the north boundary of Cerro Gordo crosses the Winnebago river southwest of Fertile".
The tents were rough affairs but warm and comfortable in Winter. They were built of poplar poles covered with coarse slough grass matting, canvas cloth and ox hides. There were 80 tents or more strung along the river for half a mile.

"During the Winter of 72 and 73 they spent their whole time hunting and trapping and made a clean sweep of all game, By Spring there was not a deer, or wolf left in this part of the State, nor scarcely an otter, mink or other fur bearing animals.

Ice Water for Baths.--They were a healthy people and lived well on buckhead ony, parched corn and beans. Regardless of the weather, the children were given daily baths, through the ice on the river, an ordeal which they appeared not to mind in the least. The whole camp was overrun with dogs of every description, and scores of typical Indian ponies were tethered to the trees without shelter of any kind.

We were living at the time on what was known as the Warren Serrine homestead on the south side of the river 80 rods from the camp. The place is now owned by David Beckman. On May 16, 1873, an Indian called on father and presented him and myself with a dozen fish muskrat spears. He announced that the camp was being razed and that they were leaving for Dakota territory in four days.

On the fourth morning following his visit I climbed to the top of Camp Rock a large boulder on the bank of the river which in the early days was known as a land mark or mile post on the river trail. From this vantage point I had a good view of the procession as it emerged from the woods and moved slowly up stream. Was Picturesque sight. For a last look at the spot where their homes had been.

There was not a wheeled vehicle of any kind in the cavalcade. The tent material was transported on long poles strapped at one end to the hores shoulders, the other end dragging on the ground and held together with cross ties on which the load was carried, Children rode four to a pony in canvass bags slung across the backs of wooly little ponies not much larger than the Shetland breeds. Aged bucks sat their mounts erect and proudly, and portly squaws perched on top the tent material. Most of the younger squaws trudged a foot carrying cumbersome packs, and young bucks with guns on their shoulders often broke rank to let fly a heavy charge at a whirring partridge grouse.

By the time the last rider passed by, The vanguard had reached a point two mi s up the stream, and by noon the last Indian disappeared around a bend in the river.

Never Returned to Site.--"So far as I can recall" Mr Ebaugh concluded this was the last band of Indians in the county.

They never returned to the site of their old village. Eight years later however in 1891 a band of 50 arrived from Wisconsin and camped one winter just across the Worth County line near Fertile.

Mr Ebaugh was born in Ohio, and was accompanied west by his parents and two brothers, He arrived in Mason City at the time his uncle John McMullen, was opening that town's first general store. Another uncle Lew McMullen had a few years previously filed a homestead on the present site of Forest City. But owing to an Indian scare, originating farther west, he had relinquished his rights and returned to the Mason City settlement. At the time of the Indian Exodus, Lew, McMullen lived in a log house on a timber tract joining the Serrine homestead on the north, and on the dividing line between the two places stands Camp Rock, the boulder alluded to by Mr Ebaugh in his story. The McMullen land is now owned by S.L. Sanderson who resides on the place.

1992 FERTILE LITTLE LEAGUE BASEBALL & SOFTBALL

A total of 101 kids played ball this year. There were 7 teams and 5 coaches.

- | | |
|-----------------|--|
| Linda Levang | T-Ball - 24 players |
| Arnold Hauge | Traveling T-Ball - 14 players |
| Craig Hansmeier | Pee-Wee's East - 12 players |
| Vino Ramon | Pee Wee's West & Midgets - 18 players |
| Jody Smith | Girls Midgets & Girls Pee-Wee's - 31 players |

Each team played approximately 7 home games and 7 away games, which kept both diamonds busy at all times.

Fertile T-Ball consisted of 24 players this year. These players were 6, 7 & 8 years old. The team was coached by Linda Levang and assisted by her daughter Stephanie. The T-Ball team met 10 times to practice and play games against each other. We tried to teach the players basic fundamentals on catching, throwing, and batting. There was alot of improvement by the end of the season. Coach Levang would like to thank all the players and families for their participation & support.

Total amount of money given by the town council to the Little League this year was $500.00. Total amount paid to coaches was $1750.00. Through the hard work of many people the concession stand took in approximately $1400.00.

Extensive fund raisers were held this year to buy needed things; new uniforms, balls, bats, bases, new pitching machine, materials for wiring machine, new catching uniform, protective helmets for boys, 3 new bleachers, paying the umpires, and finishing the new diamond. Total amount was approximately $4800.00.

Many hours of volunteer work has been given by many people. We thank you for this. It takes a lot of people and a lot of money to run a Little League. We feel like Fertile has one of the best programs in the area to offer our kids.
